You, Who laid the cornerstone, Architect of space,
 Who commanded day to break, assigned the dawn its place.
 You scatter winds, cut a path for the thunderstorm,
 swaddle seas in the clouds, cause the rain to pour.
 You scatter winds from the east, hold the sea at bay,
 scatter winds from the west, part night from day.
 Oceans thunder, raging waters roar.
 Mountains tremble, mighty forests soar.
 Who begot the drops of dew?
 From whose womb comes frost of heaven,
 comes the ice and treasures of snow,
 ice and snow?
